EARLY VEGETABLES .- It is not every family that owns a good hot-bed; but this need not deter them from trying to produce a few early vegetables. A few boxes or flower pots, filled with fine earth, may be placed in a window, and answer the purpose of a hot-bed. Tomatoes, cabbages, peppers, and similar plants, may be started in a warm room, and by transplanting once or twice before the time arrives for once or twice before the time arrives for setting out, they will be several weeks in advance of those grown in the garden. Avoid the too common mistake of sowing the seed too thickly, thereby crowding the plants, and causing them to grow tall and slender. A half dozen good, stocky plants will give more fruit and much earlier, than several dozen poor, spindling, sickly ones. A small flower pot, six inches in diameter, is large enough to start two or three dozen plants of one sort; and when they are two or three inches high, transplant into boxes or larger pots, giving each plant room to grow. If they grow too tall and slender, pinch off the upper portion of the stem, and this will cause them to grow stocky. Always keep the plants where they will receive the direct rays of the sun during the greater part of the day. With but little care and a trifling expense, every family can raise all the early vegetable plants required.

MANURE FROM A TON OF HAY.—I see in the Rural New Yorker, a question from H. Ostrum, as to what is the value of manure from a ton of hay. It is impossible to give him an answer, as to how much it is worth to him, individually, as that depends on how cheap he can make or procure it from other sources. But I will attempt to give him the value of it in pro-
